THE STATE AND DISTRICT IMPACT OF THE CLINTON TAX INCREASE

(Updating Backgrounder Update No. 208, "The States and Districts Hit Hardest by the 1993 Tax Increase," November 24, 1993.)

With April 15 just around the corner, many taxpayers are acutely aware that the tax burden in America is at an all-time high. This is due in part to President Clinton and Congress, who imposed on the American economy last year the largest tax increase in world history. While no region of the country was spared, the tax hike will have a particularly severe impact on certain states and congressional districts. The state of California, for instance, will lose more than $37 billion over the next five years as a result of the new taxes included in last year's legislation. On a per capita basis, Connecticut is the hardest hit. The $5.8 billion impact of the Clinton tax hike on Connecticut equals $1,711 for every man, woman, and child in the state. Amazingly, all four U.S. Senators representing these two states voted for the tax bill.

The impact on congressional districts is even more pronounced. As detailed in the Appendix, 39 congressional districts will lose more than $1 billion apiece over the next five years thanks to last year's record tax hike. One district in New York City will have more than $3.4 billion taken out of its economy. A district in southern California comes in second, losing nearly $2.8 billion. Surprisingly, the Members of Congress from these two districts voted in favor of the tax increase. Indeed, of the 39 Members representing districts that will lose more than $1 billion, fourteen voted in favor of the tax increase.

As the tables that follow indicate, no state or district will benefit from the higher taxes. These figures notwithstanding, the White House still maintains that taxpayers come out ahead because higher taxes will stimulate economic growth, lower interest rates, encourage job creation, and reduce the budget deficit. Unfortunately, it appears that none of these goals will be met. Instead, by continuing the high-tax policies of the Bush White House, the current Administration is largely responsible for the economy's continued sub-par performance. Consider:

- ✓ Economic growth, which historically has increased at an annual average of more than five percent the three years following a recession, has been averaging barely half the levels normally achieved at this stage of a business cycle.

- ✓ Interest rates, which had been falling continuously since 1989, have reversed their downward trend since the tax bill was adopted.
- ✓ Job creation, like economic growth, has been much weaker than normal. Net new job creation is running less than one-third the amounts normally seen three years after a recession ends.
- ✓ Deficit reduction, meanwhile, remains nothing more than a promise. The White House claims the deficit will fall to less than $200 billion next year, but taxpayers may remember that supporters of the 1990 tax increase promised there would be a budget surplus this year if that tax bill were enacted. The bill was approved, but the deficit this year is expected to be well above $200 billion.

Higher Taxes Hurt Everyone. The Administration argues that voters should be happy because only the “rich” are paying the higher taxes. This is grossly inaccurate. Many of the bill’s provisions, such as higher gas taxes and increased taxation of Social Security benefits, are paid directly by lower- and middle-income taxpayers. Moreover, these taxpayers also suffer as a result of the “soak-the-rich” taxes included in the tax bill.

The White House asserts that higher income tax rates are a way to make wealthy Americans like Donald Trump and Leona Helmsley pay “their fair share.” Playing the “politics of envy” may get good headlines, but it is bad economics. In reality, higher tax rates will impose a very heavy cost on small businesses, savings, and investment. Small businesses—partnerships, sole proprietorships, and subchapter S corporations—are affected because almost all of them file under the individual income tax code. To make matters worse, the higher income tax rates punish precisely those small businesses that become successful, earn some money, and would be in a position, were it not for higher taxes, to re-invest those earnings and create new jobs.

Higher income tax rates on the “rich” also penalize lower- and middle-income taxpayers because of the negative impact on savings and investment. The White House’s class warfare campaign conjures up images of corporate fat cats, but most of the income earned by the wealthy is not big salaries for Fortune 500 executives. Instead, it is dividends, interest, capital gains, and other investment income. By dramatically boosting tax rates, politicians have sharply reduced incentives to save and invest. And as even the most liberal economist will admit, job creation and rising incomes depend on savings and investment. Much like the luxury tax passed in 1990, which was designed to penalize wealthy yacht-buyers but wound up throwing thousands of middle-income boat builders out of work, higher income tax rates designed to punish rich people will backfire.

METHODOLOGY

As illustrated in the Appendix tables, the $262.5 billion of revenue in last year’s tax bill was divided into four parts: 1) taxes aimed at the rich, such as higher income tax rates, increased Medicare taxes, and the estate tax increase, which are projected to raise $146.8 billion over the five-year period, 2) higher gas taxes, which are predicted to generate $32.1 billion over the five-year period, 3) increased taxes on So- cial Security benefits, which are estimated to raise $24.6 billion over the five-year period, and 4) $59 billion of other revenues included in the tax bill.

The four separate numbers for each congressional district and state were produced as following:

- 1) The increased tax burden on the “rich” for each congressional district was calculated by taking the number of households in the nation affected by higher income tax rates, 1.4 million, and dividing that number into the $146.8 billion of projected revenue from taxes aimed at upper-income taxpayers. That figure, representing the average five-year tax increase for each “rich” household, was then multiplied by the number of rich households in each district. That number of affected households in each district was obtained from the Treasury Department using the Freedom of Information Act. The figures for each state, of course, are the sum of the tax burden in each district in the state. For more detailed information, see “The States and Districts Hit Hardest by the 1993 Tax Increase,” Heritage Foundation Background Update No. 208, November 24, 1993.
- 2) The gas tax figures for each state were compiled using Federal Highway Administration data on driving patterns, which allows the $32.1 billion in expected revenues to be allocated among the states. The congressional district data were developed by simply dividing the state total by the number of congressional districts. This calculation, it should be noted, will overstate the cost for urban districts and understate the impact on rural districts. For more detailed information, see “The Real Story on Gas Taxes,” Heritage Foundation F.Y.I., July 21, 1993.
- 3) The state and congressional district numbers for the increased tax on Social Security benefits were calculated using Census Bureau data on the number of elderly households in each congressional district with incomes over $35,000. The state numbers, of course, are simply the total of each congressional district. For more detailed information, see “The Clinton Surtax on the Elderly’s Savings,” Heritage Foundation F.Y.I., August 18, 1993.
- 4) The remaining $59 billion of revenues in the tax bill is simply distributed evenly among all congressional districts. This calculation doubtlessly overstates the impact on poorer districts and understates the revenue loss for wealthier districts, but given the wide range of revenue sources comprising the $59 billion—everything from higher corporate income taxes and limits on deductions for business meals to “user fees” and moneys raised by auctioning off portions of the radio spectrum—any attempt to be more specific would create the appearance of jiggling the numbers to generate pre-determined results.
