

NEWS > CRIME & COURTS

Woman pleads guilty in El Paso County voter fraud case, used dead man's ballot

By KIERAN NICHOLSON | knicholson@denverpost.com | The Denver Post
March 8, 2017 at 4:41 p.m.

0

An El Paso County woman who attempted to vote in the 2016 primary election using a deceased man's ballot has pleaded guilty in the case.

Toni Newbill pleaded guilty to voting twice under Colorado Revised Statute 1-13-710, according to the county clerk's office.

Newbill attempted to use the ballot of Ralph Nanninga, who died in 2012.

"Our office takes voter fraud seriously, and we're committed to combating it in every form," Clerk Chuck Broerman said. "We'll continue to work with various agencies to prevent voter fraud, clean up registration lists, and prosecute those who try to abuse our democratic system."

Newbill faces probation, community service and a fine and must pay court fees.

Policies
Report an Error
Contact Us
Submit a News Tip

 The Trust Project

TAGS: VOTER FRAUD, VOTING

Kieran Nicholson | Night Breaking News Reporter

Kieran Nicholson covers breaking news for The Denver Post. He started at the Post in 1986, at the old building on 15th and California streets. Nicholson has covered a variety of beats including suburbs, courts, crime and general assignment.

knicholson@denverpost.com

 Follow Kieran Nicholson @kierannicholson

Paid for with Pennsylvania taxpayer dollars.

SPONSORED CONTENT

PA Voters Can Vote from Home in the Nov 3 Election

By PA Dept of State

Vote from the comfort and safety of your own home in the November 3 General Election.
