PIERRE, S.D. (AP) – A Harrold woman who was prosecuted this year for an election law violation more than a decade ago won't see prison time.

Attorney General Marty Jackley says 54-year-old Janice Howe was sentenced Tuesday to four years in prison with all time suspended. She'll spend four years on probation.

Family members of the Crow Creek Sioux Tribe woman have questioned whether she was prosecuted now because she's spoken out against South Dakota's handling of Native American children in foster care. Jackley's office has rejected that.
