Other poll workers saw what happened and reported the women's suspicious behavior.

"They decided to cheat, they got caught," said Harris County Clerk Stan Stanart, the county's top election official. "We take election integrity seriously in Harris County. Fair, honest, and secure elections are crucial to our citizens and a top priority in the County Clerk's Office. One person. One vote. It's the law."

Thomas and Johnson were each charged with a felony but pleaded down to a Class A misdemeanor of unlawfully depositing a ballot. They faced up to one year in jail, but served just one day and were released, according to the Harris County District Attorney's Office.

The two were nominated to serve as poll workers by the Harris County Democrat Party, even though both were known to have criminal records.
