A voter fraud investigation into the 2004 general election has led to the indictment of a Texarkana elected official and two other women, the Texas Attorney General's Office announced Friday.

The three women are accused of illegally handling the mail-in ballots for seniors and other voters.

A Bowie County grand jury indicted 68-year-old Texarkana City Councilwoman Willie J. Ray, Melinda Hunter, 34, and Jamillah Johnson, 30. Ray and Hunter were charged with seven counts of illegally possessing and transporting ballots. Johnson faces two counts of the same charge.

The case involves voters who allegedly had help filling out applications for mail-in ballots. Investigators say the three women returned to the homes of people they'd assisted to pick up completed ballots and mail them.

If convicted of the misdemeanor, the women face fines of up to $
